Over the past several years, Angela Ireland and her team have tackled the interior spaces in this Castle Pines home, room by room. “We started with the front entry and dining room,” Ireland says, “but I always had my eye on her kitchen.” The client, a newly single mother of four girls, is a fan of striking hues such as purple and sage green, so Ireland wanted to weave these shades subtly into a mostly white kitchen, which is adjacent to a color-filled family room.

As a finishing touch, Ireland organized all the pantries and cabinets. “If you were to open her doors, everything has a spot,” she says. Overall, she adds, the project is true to the nature of her designs, but she is also conscious that each client is an individual, and their home is unique. “I want to make sure that I’m not losing sight of that in trying to be the trendy designer or not listening to them. This is their home and their space, and if she loves purple and sage, it’s a great opportunity for me to incorporate that in a way that is classic and current.”
